

A Case Study: A Tangible Way to Adapt Policing to Community Needs (Tsuut'ina Nation Police Services)

September 10, 2024

10:00-11:30am MST

Policing has had a checkered history in its relationship with Indigenous Communities. Come and learn about how Tsuut'ina Nation Police Service does things differently, focused on relationship building and trust.

*Please note that this session will not be recorded or uploaded to our website.

Learning Outcomes:

- Tangible ideas to adapt systems to meet calls to Justice and calls to action
- Understand the importance of trust and relationship building

Speakers:

Brittany Ouellette, executive officer, Tsuutina Nation Police Service. Brittany Ouellette, was born and raised in Calgary, Alberta, Canada and her family comes from Kinonjeoshtegon Chippewa First Nation, while she also acknowledges her strong family roots within Treaty 7 and Metis Region 3, sharing her life journey with her best friend Jamie and their three children. Brittany takes great pride in being an Indigenous woman who is actively participating in advocating for tangible change in our sorrow systems. Brittany Ouellette began with the Tsuut'ina Nation Police Service in 2015, and currently holds the role of Executive Officer. She obtained a bachelor's degree in Criminal Justice and continues to pursue education through the University of Victoria, Masters of Community Development Program while actively advocating alongside other resilient community members to pave the road for future generations of Indigenous peoples in Alberta.
