

Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women: Programs and Services Overview

February 8th, 2022

10:00-11:00

The Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women (IAAW) is the Institute that delivers outstanding programs and services to Indigenous women. IAAW supplies resources to women when available, and supports women with navigating complex systems in order to access the resources that they need. IAAW is the Institute that honours esquao (women), and the Institute that leads action for legal justice. This session will provide a brief but detailed overview of what IAAW offers to support participants.

Learning Outcomes: Participants will:

- Leave this session more informed about responsibilities of IAAW as an organization, and the roles of its staff and partners
- Explore how, organizationally, IAAW relates to First Nations TSAG
- Acquire the information necessary to access IAAW supports.

Speaker:

Jenna Weber, M.Ed., IAAW, Justice Systems Navigator. Holds extensive experience working, as an Indigenous person, with Indigenous Peoples and communities in the areas of education, child welfare, law, and policy development. Has a background in community engagement that leads to sound programs and service development/delivery - predominantly in Métis and First-Nation communities.

Target Audience:
Indigenous women and/or individuals who support
Indigenous women
